COMMON SENSE FROM GENERAL RECKORD

In addressing a graduating class in Baltimore last week, Major General Milton A. Record, former 29th Division commander and Adjutant General of Maryland, said that Americans demand freedom of speech and the press but are "too lazy mentally" to utilize the various viewpoints such freedom makes available to them.

He declared that democracies are founded on the idea that men are able to think for themselves, and continued:

"The only reason for free speech is to provide a variety of ideas, opinions and facts on the basis of which thinking men may form their own opinions and run their own government.

"We often let other people think for us, then criticize our legislators when we didn't even bother to vote.

"Believe in America, be proud that you are an American. No nation in all history has contributed so often or so much in blood, food, gold to the welfare of other peoples. Learn to think for yourselves."

OL' MAN WEATHER

It was Mark Twain who ventured the opinion that there was no such thing as bad weather .. only different kinds of good weather.

Of course, Mark Twain saw things with a bit of a twinkle in his eye, and in all probability he could write his amusing stories in rainy weather as well as when the sun shone. His book sales didn't depend on whether the soil was moist or parched or whether the elements kept people inside their houses when they should be working at their jobs outdoors.

It's different with farmers. For example, no one could ever convince a farmer that the weather is good while he is sitting at his window looking out at a teeming rain, watching Jupiter Pluvius making lakes in the planted fields when all the time he knows that he should be outdoors cultivating his crops .. and can't.

Not all the awyers in this universe could gang up to convince a farmer that rainy weather is giving him a good chance to rest and relax when he doesn't want to rest and relax, when in fact the only thing he wants to do is work at his endless job of making a living.

Still, it's a lucky thing that present-day farmers don't have to completely waste those precious days when bad weather keeps them off their fields. Modern farmers have learn how to profitably use those hours of enforced idleness.

They know that pulpwood prices are high, that they can always thin out their woodlots, getting in a mighty useful day with an ax or saw when all else fails. In fact, they know that they can turn the mos dismal kind of day into a nice cash profit by cutting their seasonal crops of top quality pulpwood in so-called bad weather.

BASIS FOR TAXATION

From Charlottesville Progress

The city of Richmond, seeking more tax revenue from the Virginia Electric Power Company, is asking the State Corporation Commission to raise the assessment of VEPCO property from the present 40 per cent of fair market value to the 100 per cent which the city claims it uses as a tax base for other property. We know of no good reason why utilities should enjoy a tax exemption of 60 per cent or any other amount. Their property should bear its full proportionate share of the cost of government.

But Richmond would have a better case in its litigation before the Corporation Commission if it could show that its 100 per cent assessment of non-utility property was a reality rather than a pretense. VEPCO attorneys showed the commission for example, that a lot at Fifth and Broad Streets in the heart of the city's business section, was assessed at $506,220 on January 1, 1945, but that on Jhue 1, 1945, it sold for $1,450,000. A so-called 100 per cent assessment, in actually to have been somewhat less than the 40 per cent which Richmond claims is too low for the utility company.

Equity demands the assessment of all property at a uniform proportion of its true value. But before such a procedure can have any meaning or make any effective contribution to the achievement of a fair system of taxation it is necessary that adequate means of establishing values be provided. It can be done, but apparantly it isn't being done in Richmond and we doubt if it is being done anywhere in Virginia.

SOME SWIMMING RULES

From Eastern Shore News

Since it won't be long now before the swimming season is in full swing and believing that it might be a good idea to pass along some good advice to swimmers, whether they accept it os not, we are printing below some safety rules which, if followed by the swimmers might result in the saving of some lives from drowning.

Here they are:

Do not swim alone at night.

Don't overestimate your strength

Never swim across a lake or river, or fro mheadland to island, or in unknown or dangerous waters unless accompanied by a boat and a strong, level-headed companion, trained in life-saving.

At the first opportunity learn how to rescue drowning persons without unduly endangering your own life, and learn how to administer artificial respiration.

Do not attempt to swim to a drowning person's rescue in rough or deep water unless no other help is at hand and you are confident you are capable of effecting a rescue. If possible, before starting, call to someone to get a rope or a boat.

Don't swim for at least two hours after eating and never beyond your depth in very cold water.

Never drink cold beverages immediately before swimming.

Skylarking in boats is dangerous

Don't duck or "tease" your friends who are not as good swimmers as yourself.

Never dive in unknown, shallow or rocky water.

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE

From Pittsylvania Tribune

We have a way of taking the mail for granted. It's system of transportation and delivery is so good we somehow think it works automatically.

Any system that will take up a postal card, on a rural route 20 miles in the country from Bangor, Maine, and deliver it, on a rural route 20 miles in the country from San Diego, California, about four thousand miles from its mailing point, for one cent, and make 999 correct deliveries out of 1,000, is bound to be a good system.

It does not just happen that way. It is one of the most perfectly organized systems in the world.

At present, most long distance mail is carried by the railroads; but when the trains were stopped by strikes, the mail did not stop. Deliveries were planned and made by air plane and motor trucks and there was very little interruption.

Within another two months or so, air mail postage will be reduced to five cents and with the aid of the helicopter airplanes a large part of the first class mail, which has to travel 200 to 300 miles, will go by air. The aim of the post office department is to get first class mail transported by air at the three cent rate, but it is going to take two or three years to do this.

Our mail service in this country is just about as good as it can be and we should appreciate it, because it means a lot. *

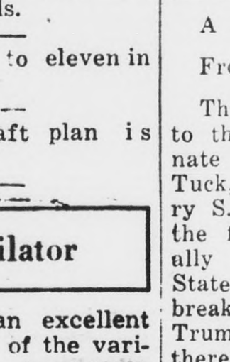
Window Ventilator



This sketch shows an excellent way to fix the windows of the various barns or farm buildings. There are no hinges and the windows can be opened and closed at will or removed entirely if desired.

The triangular pieces (A) are fastened to the sides of the frame as shown. A piece (C) across the bottom holds the bottom of the sash in place. Another piece (B) across the top keeps the pieces (A) the correct distance apart and serves as a rest for the sash when it is opened.

A small button fastened to the window frame at the top holds the window shut, and another attached to the sash holds the window open.

TAKE MY WORD FOR IT!

By FRANK COLBY

Bell Syndicate.—WNU Features

OH, THAT WORD 'SAFELY'!

A teacher of English writes: "Thanks for your recent article, 'Oh, Those Adverbs!' which pointed out the all too common errors, 'arrived safely, they were safely below, he is safely at base,' etc. I have drilled my classes on your explanation that, in describing the state or condition (mental or physical) of the subject, an adjective (and not an adverb) is required. But they still are often confused. Why not give us another of your helpful non-technical keys to the correct use of 'safe-safely'?"

Whether to use the adverb "safely" or the adjective "safe" may be correctly determined by this key phrase: safe and sound. If it makes sense, use the adjective "safe." If it doesn't make sense, use the adverb "safely."

Let us test a few sentences:

He arrived safe and sound. This makes sense, therefore: He arrived safe.

All planes returned safe and sound. Therefore: All planes returned safe.

They were safe and sound below. Therefore: They were safe below.

He is safe and sound at base Therefore: He is safe at base.

Now note:

The flight was made safe and sound. This does not make sense, since an adverb is needed to modify the action of the verb. Therefore: The flight was made safely.

Their escape was safe and sound effected. No. Therefore: Their escape was safely effected.

The rescue mission was safe and sound accomplished. Not sense. Therefore: The rescue mission was safely accomplished.

In short, the foregoing "safe" sentences all refer to the state or condition of the subject: they arrived, they returned, they were, he is safe (unharmed, an adjective). In the "safely" sentences, all refer to the action of the verb: the flight was made, their escape was effected, the mission was accomplished safely (an adverb meaning "in a safe manner").

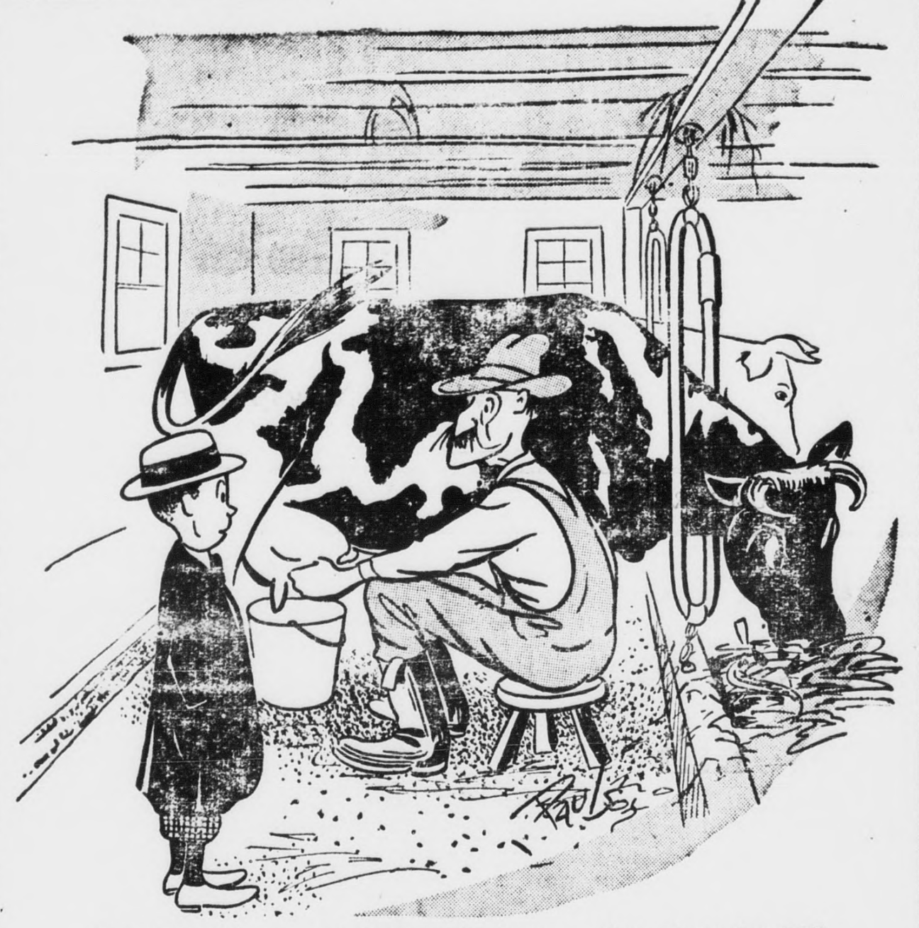
Q. I am in despair over my failure to stamp out "ain't" among my English students.—Mrs. T. M.

A. First of all, "ain't" is a corruption of the obsolete contraction "a'n't" for "am not." "A'n't" was pronounced "ahnt" or "ant." For some reason now unknown, "a'n't" disappeared, having been superseded by the form "ain't," a nonsensical contraction, since there is no such phrase as "ai not."

"Ain't" for "am not" is bad enough in any event — the dictionaries stigmatize it as "dialectal" or "illiterate." But "ain't" approaches the barbarous when it is used for "art not, is not, has not" and "have not" as: "I ain't going; he ain't going; you ain't going; he ain't gone; they ain't gone."



"In the city, we get OUR milk from a nice, clean truck!"

A DRAFT IS A DRAFT

From Richmond Times-Dispatch

The idea of drafting workers into the armed services didn't originate with Governor William M. Tuck, nor yet with President Harry S. Truman. Governor Tuck was the first American executive actually to induct workers into the State militia for the purpose of breaking a strike, and President Truman recommended shortly thereafter that Congress provide for drafting strikers.

But the Charlotte, N. C., NEWS points out that the man who first proposed such a draft was none other than the late Franklin D. Roosevelt! The unions have been belaboring President Truman for wanting to "enslave" the workers via the draft, and for having finally repudiated the principles enunciated by President Roosevelt. They seem totally oblivious of the fact that Roosevelt proposed a draft on three separate occasions.

The first time, the NEWS points out, was in Roosevelt's message vetoing the Smith-Connally Act in the summer of 1943. At that time he said:

"I recommend that the Selective Service Act be amended so that persons may be inducted into noncombat miiltary service up to the age of 65 years. This will enable us to induct into the military service all persons who engage in strikes or stoppages or other interruptions of work in plants in possession of the United States."

Since Congress paid little or no attention to the foregoing proposal, Mr. Roosevelt returned to the assault in 1944, and recommended in his annual message that Congress pass "a national service law which, for the duration of the war, would prevent strikes." He renewed this request in 1945, again without success.

Is it argued that the Roosevelt proposals were advanced in wartime, and that there is no proper comparison between such proposals and those brought forward by Truman now that the war is over? The answer is that officially the war is not yet over, and that Mr. Truman proposed the draft solely as a temporary measure, to be effective for only six months following the official termination of hostilities. Consequently there is practically no difference between the draft a la Roosevelt and the draft a la Truman. Why then all the up roar? The TIMES-DISPATCH views the drafting of strikers with skepticism, if not alarm, but it is a bit baffled in trying to understand why the idea created hardly a ripple, when suggested three times by Roosevelt, but is an instrumentality for enslaving the workers when brought forward by Truman.

Substitute for the Case bill is discussed.

Nowhere but in this column would you ever read a news note like this—but we think it's a good addition to the Utter Nonsense Department. Seems, in one city, there are five girls who walk to school together every morning. They all wait to be called for by the girl who lives farthest away. She pulls along a child's wooden delivery wagon into which all the girls drop their school books. They take turns pulling the wagon. Of course, it's all painted up with jabberwocky and stuff, just like your O.A.O.'s Jalopy. Slick Chicks, please copy.

WANNA MAKE SOMETHING OF IT?

With colorless nail polish as basic equipment you teens can turn out anything short of new cars. You've discovered that nail polish not only shines, but preserves. And it's such gluesome glop! Get out your bottles and, as the Wesson boys say, "You just sm-m-ear it on!"

Well, Pop My Corn!—Print your favorite joke or jingle on a little piece of paper. Paste the paper on a piece of plywood; then cover with colorless nail polish. While the stuff is still sticky, drop on corn kernels in border effect. Back with a pin and you have the latest Corn Popper lapel gadget.

Look Where You're Going—And you can, if you paint an eye on the toe of each of your saddles with red nail polish. Turn the eyes inward and you'll look both pigeon-toed and cross-eyed at the same time—which is definitely the Neatest Trick of the Week.

Rubber Wristlets—Those rubbers from mother's canning jars make slick bracelets. One of our Hi-Style Scouts tells us she painted them first in bright colors; then coated with colorless nail polish. Americans Battle 5,971 Cases of Typhus in Japan

TOKYO. — American infantrymen were fighting a typhus epidemic in the Osaka area described as the "largest typhus epidemic among civilians to confront the army during the war emergency."

Cases reported in Osaka reached 5,971 and 7,113 cases were recorded in the 12 prefects in the 25th division jurisdiction. The death rate was set at 8 per cent.

The number of typhus cases among troops since the occupation was three, none of which was fatal, 8th army medical officers said.

Marriage Bars Defied by Love

Stowaway Girl Stumbles Against Obstacles.

HONOLULU. — The romance of a blue-eyed New Orleans girl and a California oil heir, which began in an Oakland (Calif.) dance hall and hurdled the separating miles of Pacific ocean by means of a stowaway adventure, ran into obstacles, barring their way to marriage.

There's the trouble of being underage. There's the objection by the oil heir's mother. And there's the skeptical probation officer.

But——

"We are in love and we are going to be married and they might as well realize nothing can stop us," insisted tall, brown-haired Marguerite Faye Human, 19.

She came here by stowing away on a naval transport in order to be near John G. Ochsner, seaman first class. In a little more than a year he is to inherit two million dollars of the Kettleman Hills oil fortune.

"Johnny's money doesn't mean a thing to me," she said.

The youthful sailor's mother, Mrs. Hilda Carling Ochsner, cabled from Oakland her objections which halted all efforts to obtain a marriage license, but he was sure of his love although not so sure of a rosy future.

Being 19, he has to have parental consent under territorial law. After the shore patrol hustled him back to his base for a talk with his executive officer, he wasn't even sure he'd be seeing Marguerite as often as he hoped.

And, although Marguerite was released on probation after her hearing for stowing away from San Francisco on the President Hayes, the probation officer showed no inclination to grant his necessary approval, either.

"If we have to," Marguerite said, "we can wait two more months (until Johnny is 20) and then get married. I'll get a job and work."

The "home makers" have begun their annual food canning work, canning many peas, cherries, strawberries, etc. Even though sugar is very scarce, fruit must be saved. Dried apples are desirable any time. Try this recipe for canning beets, if you want them to retain their natural color: use small and medium size beets; as soon as it can be done after taking themup, remove tops, wash and drain; in the meantime place canner on stove with just enough water to make a good steam when it comes to a boil. Place beets in a colander or wire basket, not to tough the water, place top on, and allow the beets to steam until the skin slips easily; remove from the canner, remove the skin; put 1-2 teaspoon salt in the bottom of clean, bot quart jars, then pack with beets, using no water; seal and process 3 hours. Sweet potatoes keep fine also canned by this recipe. Pass it alng.

THE OLD JUDGE SAYS...

WALT: "I don't quite understand what you mean when you say distillers merely process grain during distilling, [illegible]ge."

DAVE: "I don't either, Judge. Would you mind explaining?"

OLD JUDGE: "Glad to, fellows. You see, during the distilling process, only the starch is removed from the grain. The part rich in vitamins and proteins is recovered...dried... and returned to the farmers in the form of highly nutritious feed concentrates. Actual tests have shown that these distillers' dried grains are far more nourishing than the grain in its original state."

WALT: "How do the farmers use them, Judge?"

OLD JUDGE: "They mix these premium-quality feed supplements with original grain for feeding their cattle, livestock and poultry. Doing so enables them to save as much as 20% original grain."

DAVE: "I can see now how unfounded those rumors are about distillers wasting grain. Looks to me as if it's just the opposite."
